Baltimore; Printed by Benjamin Edes, 1811. 1st ed. 23 pp. Orig. printed self-wrappers, stitched as issued. Light dampstaining, else a very good untrimmed copy. $600.00
Quincy (1772-1864), a Harvard-educated Boston lawyer and son of a noted Revolutionary patriot, was the minority leader in Congress. This speech on the bill to admit Orleans Territory to the Union as the state of Louisiana startled the nation. Staunchly opposed to the admission, by majority vote, of any territory outside the bounds of the original United States, he said, "I am compelled to declare it as my deliberate opinion, that, if this bill passes, the bonds of the union are, virtually, dissolved; that the states, which compose it are free from their moral obligations, and that as it will be the right of all, so it will be the duty of some to prepare, definitely, for a separation; amicably, if they can, violently, if they must." Quincy was successful in having this doctrine adopted in the Massachusetts legislature 2 years later in a set of resolutions. In the speech he goes on to say, "It is to preserve, to guard the constitution of my country, that I denounce this attempt. ..." After reciting the preamble to the Constitution he continues, "It is, we the people of the United States, for ourselves and our posterity, not for the people of Louisiana; nor for the people of New-Orleans, or of Canada. None of these enter into the scope of the instrument; it embraces only 'the United States of America.'" Quincy clearly sees the admission of western states as not only a breach of the Constitution but a gross usurpation of the power of the Federal government. He insists that Congress has no authority to throw the rights and liberties of U.S. citizens away on "the wild men on the Missouri, nor with the mixt, though more respectable race of Anglo-Hispano-Gallo Americans, who bask on the sands, in the mouth of the Mississippi. I make no objection to these from their want of moral qualities, or political light. The inhabitants of New-Orleans are, I suppose, like those of all other countries, some good, some bad, some indifferent." A scarce and important work pertaining to Louisiana, which, Quincy's objections notwithstanding, was admitted to the Union as the 18th state on 30 April 1812. American Imprints 23776. Sabin 67246.

Evans 21381. NAIP w030522. Dumond, p.91. Reese, The Federal Hundred 14 (ref.). This edition follows and enlarges upon the constitution of the Society as published in 1787. The Pennsylvania Society for Promoting the Abolition of Slavery, and the Relief of Free Negroes Unlawfully Held in Bondage was founded in 1774 by Anthony Benezet, and most of its members were Quakers. The officers of the Society included Benjamin Franklin as president, Benjamin Rush and Tench Coxe as secretaries, and Thomas Paine serving as clerk of the General Assembly. Franklin and Rush helped write the Society's constitution. Following the society's constitution and list of officers, the remainder of the present pamphlet reprints a series of acts governing slavery in Pennsylvania. These include "An Act for the Gradual Abolition of Slavery," "An Act to give Relief to certain Persons taking Refuge in this State, with respect to their slaves," and an additional act of March 1788 amending the original act for gradual abolition. This last act is prefixed by a report of the committee of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania. In 1788, as a result of petitions from the Society, the Pennsylvania legislature amended the gradual abolition act of 1780, prohibiting the transportation of slave children or pregnant women out of Pennsylvania, making it illegal to build, outfit, or issue slave ships from Philadelphia, and imposing heavier fines for the kidnapping of slaves.

The Southern and Western Monthly Magazine and Review was popularly known as "Simms's Magazine" for its editor William Gilmore Simms, who took it on after withdrawing from The Magnolia. Though he championed a national literature, Simms was most interested in promoting Southern literature. "In Simms's view the Southern and western's nationalism and its sectionalism were in no way incompatible. Insisting that a truly national literature could be made up only `of the literature of distinct sections,' he dismissed charges of narrowness leveled at Southern magazines. For him the fault lay rather with those Northern periodicals that denounced sectionalism while promoting their own writers and ignoring those of the South"-- Chielens, ed. American Literary Magazines, pp.370-5. Publication ceased with the December 1845 issue when it merged with the Southern Literary Messenger.

HOWES S-844, "aa." Sabin 89686. Field 1475. Servies 3353. Siebert Sale 658. Gilcrease, p.340. Larned 1963. One of the most important early accounts of the Seminole Wars of the period from the 1820s to the 1840s. Sprague is even-handed in this treatment of the Indians and the American troops, though he does condemn political and military leaders, as well as the white settlers in Florida who did so much to provoke the Seminoles. Published in two issues, one with ten plates and one without. This is the issue with the ten plates, and is the more desirable of the two. Seven of the plates depict Indian chiefs. "The story of the wonderful contests of a savage tribe of less than four thousand, of all ages, in 1822, and less than one thousand in 1845, with the disciplined forces of the United States, for nearly a quarter of a century, is here told with all its minutest relations. It is a sad story of heroism, gallantry, and patriotism on the side of the Aborigines, and of treachery, unscrupulous covetousness, and barefaced lying on the part of the government and its officials; including the President, the Senate, and the generals in command. The great republic was only victor at last, by inveigling the Indian chiefs, under the most sacred promises of safe conduct, into imprisonment and chains; and after losing one hundred soldiers for every Indian taken or slain, forty- five millions of treasure were expended in reducing these seven hundred patriots" - Field.

EVANS 29513 & 29514. Two scarce early reports of the Sierra Leone Company, the first containing the very rare map of the colony and its surrounds. "Plan of Sierra Leone and the Parts Adjacent." The second report is often found bound with the first and may have been issued thus. The colony of Sierra Leone was established in 1791 as a result of the efforts of Henry Smeathman, Alexander Falconbridge, and others, who were interested in alleviating the plight of victims of the slave trade. In 1792 a large number of former American slaves who had been in Nova Scotia were moved there by the British. The Sierra Leone Company was incorporated in 1795, and numerous former slaves from the United States and the Caribbean were deposited there over the next decade. The map, engraved by Philadelphia engraver J. Vallance, shows the settlement of the natives, land purchased by the company, and other settlements being developed in the area.

The "Statesman Edition." Tipped in is a 3-page autograph letter from Sumner to "My dear Waterston." "Yesterday I read the enclosed account, which will explain itself. It seems to me rather hard that I should be left in the lurch by our committee, and particularly by individuals on it who have never contributed their full quota, and who are themselves rich, too. I have so far neglected my worldly affairs during these latter years, and have been called upon so frequently for contributions, that I am less able than any member of the committee to pay this deficiency out of my own pocket. Nor do I think it just that Mr. Bingham, or Mr. Brooks, or Mr. Thayer, all of whom were originally responsible with me, and who have not contributed their full share, should let this be cast upon me. I have had the labor and responsibility of carrying the matter through, as far as it has gone, and secured contributions much beyond my portion. It seems to me, therefore, that I may properly devolve upon the members of the committee above named the duty of meeting this deficit. Upon you there is no claim, for you have already supplied more than your share; but I submit the account to you, and ask your advice as to the course to be pursued. Ever sincerely yours, Charles Sumner."

Sumner was the lead member of a committee formed to honor Horace Mann for his contributions to education. The committee decided, after originally planning a statue to honor Mann, to raise $5000 for two normal schools in Massachusetts with the funds to be matched by the state. Although Sumner did his part, his labors were not matched by the other committee members. Because not all the pledges he had raised had come in after a year of effort, he was asked to meet his note. Still, the project was successful and the monies were raised. The project itself was dear to Horace Mann, who wrote Sumner on 6 August 1846, urging him to go to the dedication of "the new Normal Schoolhouse at Bridgewater ... The active and leading agency you have had in executing measures which have led to this beneficial result would make your absence on that occasion a matter of deep regret. I know it will console you for your troubles in relation to the subject..."

Rev. Robert C. Waterston was a dedicated education reformer and follower of Horace Mann. He served for 10 years as the head of the Boston school board and President of Boston Latin School association. In addition, he was the prime mover in raising a fund of $50,000 for William Lloyd Garrison.

Charles Sumner (1811-1874) was a US senator from Massachusetts, notable advocate of the emancipation of slaves and dedicated to the cause of peace. His selection as orator at Boston's Fourth of July celebration in 1845 proved the turning point in his career from lawyer to political force. He spoke forcefully for the cause of peace. He entered the Senate in 1851 where his maiden speech was in favor of an amendment to an appropriation bill that would forbid any expenses incurred "for the surrender of fugitives from service or labor." Daniel Webster, on his final visit to the Senate, heard Sumner's three hour speech while sitting near Horace Mann. Sumner played a large part in the organization of the Republican party and he was a major opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. He was the first prominent politician to urge emancipation. Upon Republicans gaining a majority in the Senate, Sumner was made chairman of the foreign relations committee. After the war, Sumner became a major opponent of Andrew Johnson's reconstruction policies. He declared he would vote, if he could "Guilty, of all [the charges] and infinitely more." Sumner continued to serve in the Senate until his death.

King's excellent introductory essay is the best description of Timberlake and his amazing story, and the volume illustrates many important places and artifacts. Timberlake was a British officer who spent considerable time with the Cherokees in Georgia and eastern Tennessee in the early 1760s, during the turbulent period of frontier strife at the end of the French and Indian War. He later accompanied a delegation of Cherokees to London. His account, here in the first edition, is one of the best of the period, and one of the few accounts of the war with the Cherokees in the southern colonies. The map is an important cartographic work in its own right. The folding plate is "A Curious secret Journal taken by the Indians out of the Pocket of a French Officer they had kill'd." "May very well be considered the Number One book in any Tennessee library, since it is the first book ever written concerning activities in the area now embraced in this state" - Horn. "Represents the earliest and one of the historically significant works relative to the Cherokee Indians and their activities...ranks as a most desirable rare Tennessee book" - Allen. From the same sheets as the first French edition of 1650. Very scarce. The work is usually found with a translation of Historia general del Peru (Cordova, 1617). However, the translator apparently intended that the present volume, which bears its own index, should be able to stand on its own. The two volumes are assigned separate numbers in the JCB catalogue (III: 658/68 and 658/69, respectively). An important, early account of the Spanish conquest of the Incas. The author was "the son of one of the conquerors of Peru, Garcilaso de la Vega, by the daughter of the Inca Huallpa Tupac, and sister of Huayna Capac Inca, the last native monarch of Peru. He was so proud of both paternal and maternal origin, that while he assumed the Spanish name of the first, he was careful to assert his Incarial descent. He was evidently a gentleman of refinement, and possessed of much more learning than was usually acquired by the conquistadors themselves ... [He] is said by Irving to have conceived such an ardent desire to view the land of his father's nativity, that he abandoned the country of the Incas, and took up his residence at Cordova. His Royal Commentaries of Peru obtained for him the favor of the sovereigns of Leon and Castille, and the esteem of the learned throughout Spain ... He had access to sources of information that no longer exist, such as the manuscript documents and relations of the conquerors, and the quipu records of the Incas ... He had, beside, the most intimate personal relations with some of the great conquerors and commanders, and probably drew confirmation of his researches from their own lips."-- Field, p. 144-45. First appeared in the Independent. Washington praises a book by Edgar Gardner Murphy, a young white Southerner who advocated for the two races working together to repair the problems of the South and elsewhere. Murphy organized the first Conference on Race Relations in Montgomery in 1900. Its work-from his and Washington's perspective-did not go well. Washington talks of his recent trip through the South and expressed his pleasure with what he saw as a growing number of young white men who were in favor of the "ascendancy" of the Negro in the South. Given the time (1909) and what had been happening in the South, one might think Washington was living in an alternate universe. Not in Blockson or Afro-Americana.

Boards lightly rubbed, corners bumped, joints starting to split, textblock split (but holding). Light tanning and foxing throughout. About very good overall. $6500.00

A working manuscript draft in the hand of Mason Locke Weems of a section from Chapter 14 of The Life of Gen. Francis Marion... (pp.120-22 in the accompanying copy). The section is titled "A Conversation between General Marion & a Whig Boy," and describes a scene just after Marion and his men have taken a brief rest in Waccamaw. A boy has been sent by his father to warn Marion that Tory forces are gathering up the Little Pedee (Pee Dee) River. Marion is calm and sanguine in his reply to the news, "Very well my son I thank you and your daddy too for letting me know it. I believe I must try to meet the tories there." The boy is almost incredulous at Marion's cool demeanor: "O la sir general try to meet em indeed! yes, to be sure! dear me sirs hearts alive that you must, sir general! for daddy says as how he is quite sartin if you'll be there tomorrow night you may make a proper smash among the tories...." The boy goes on to explain that the Tories have heard of Marion, and that they're coming after him with "a tarnal nation sight of pistols! and bagonets! and swords! and saddles! and bridles and the dear knows what else besides!" As he goes on, the boy grows a bit unsure of Marion: "But to be sure sir general, you look like a mighty small man to fight them great big tories there on Pedee. But daddy says as how the heart is all and he says too that though you are a little man you have a monstrous great heart!"

The manuscript text is almost identical to the final printed version, except for a few minor word changes and some additional punctuation. The manuscript is accompanied by a 1841 copy of the biography, published in Philadelphia by Joseph Allen.

General Francis Marion, nicknamed "The Swamp Fox," was one of the leading American commanders in the Revolution in the South. His brilliant operations in the Carolinas kept thousands of British troops tied down and contributed immensely to ultimate American victory. Plain and unassuming, he was widely beloved by his contemporaries, and after his death this book began the process of his ascent to legend. Peter Horry, his second-in-command for part of the war, supplied many of the facts, although he was allegedly disgusted by Weems' flowery passages and disclaimed any connection with the book. What he disliked, others embraced, and the book went through many editions.

Surviving manuscripts--even a portion thereof--of American books from the early nineteenth century are quite uncommon. This manuscript is especially notable for being in the hand of Mason Locke Weems, examples of whose letters and writings are exceedingly uncommon in the market. Weems not only enhanced the reputation of Francis Marion, but famously did the same for the legend of George Washington through his popularization of the "Cherry Tree" story and its central role in shaping Washington's character at a young age.

"According to the Travels, [Weld] landed at Philadelphia in November 1795 from which he made excursions in all directions. On one of these he visited Baltimore, Washington, Alexandria, and Mount Vernon. On another he moved west to York and Lancaster, the northern neck of Virginia, and Williamsburg and Norfolk, apparently going as far south as the Dismal Swamp. At Williamsburg he noted that the capital was crumbling to pieces, that William and Mary was a grammar school rather than a college, that the church was out of repair, and that the hospital for the insane was not well regulated. On his return he journeyed to Richmond and west to the mountains and, as was usual with travelers, he described Rock Bridge. After coming back to Philadelphia he went to Canada. John Wilmer was a London merchant engaged in the West India trade, and the owner of a plantation in Jamaica. According to his testimony, he shipped a boy named Richard Civiter out to Jamaica at the request of the young man, who asserted he had no parents or family. Two years later the parents appeared and demanded damages, hauling Wilmer into a lawsuit that he claims was just a scheme to profit from his good will. The text contains much incidental information about the West India sugar trade and the state of labor in the colonies and in England, and provides a fascinating slice of Restoration life. Wilmer argues that indenturing English boys into trade in the American plantations offers a real opportunity for them to become planters in their own right. He argues that his willingness to take on a white apprentice was evidence of his good intentions, noting that African labor is much more cost effective than white labor. Wilmer asserts that African laborers cost less, work more and are more productive than Englishmen, and that the only reason that whites are ever employed in Jamaica is the government regulation demanding the employment of one white for every ten black servants, for the security of the island.
Wilmer's self-defense gives a one-sided picture, of course, and it is hard to trust a man who spells his name one way on the title and another at the end of the text (we follow Wing in using the latter). This book is uncommon at auction and on the market.
